

As for any pay for service entertainment, be in satellite or cable TV or XM radio, I expect to get a return on my investment. If I pay for XM then I want as many music channels as possible with commercial free listening. This has been provided by XM radio. If I pay for XM radio I do expect to some degree, that the providers of the XM service continue to grow and offer more varieties of programming. XM has delivered on this. Since I choose to pay for XM radio and choose to pick my programming I do not want the FCC or the NAB trying to cheat me out of any current or future provided services that XM may provide. You must understand that XM is not "public" radio in the sense of distribution. You have to make a little effort to receive XM. You have to pay a small monthly fee for XM. If XM is my primary choice for music and drive time listening then I would also like to have the weather and traffic information as part of my paid subscription. XM provides many News channels from CNN to MSNBC, many of the same news channels that you can get on AM radio. Allot of the AM talk shows are broadcasted on XM. I'm sure these programs would not like to loose their syndication with XM. Weather and traffic is no different from any other XM provided programming. For those who use and subscribe to XM, this is just another added service. Radio listeners who don't have XM radio will remain the same and never know the difference or see any impact from their fellow men and women who choose to pay for superior listening quality, service and programming. When we as citizens consciously choose to pay for a product we do not want the FCC or NAB stepping in and trying to regulate our freedom to choose!
